Note from the Editors

The editorial team is proud to publish the 2018 Denison Journal of Religion, featuring creative and wide-ranging contributions from Denisonians of a multitude of majors and backgrounds. This issue includes essays that put a fresh new spin on classic theology, examine the seemingly disparate topics of environmental justice and reproductive rights, dreaming in a Hindu context, ancient Wisdom texts, and modern Jewish denominations. These papers each give this year's Journal a unique flavor, which makes us as Editors all the more disappointed that we couldn't include more. The exceptional range of courses offered by Denison's Religion Department, as well as other Denison departments, provides students with the resources and mentorship such innovative academic work. Indeed, we feel these submissions reflect only a fraction of the exciting work that students produce day in and day out. We'd like to thank Dr. Pae for her mentorship and leadership as we rushed to make our deadlines. Additionally, our sincerest gratitude goes to Jodi Weibel, without whom this edition would not have made it to the publisher. We hope you enjoy reading these submissions as much as we did.
