Bodies Among Mt. Everest's Cliffs
by Sam Rice

Blank and mirrorless mountains reach for the sky, eighbors on their backs unsure of their surroundings.

So desperate to plant a flag, lovers sway from their paths treading foreign lines into the white landscape as children with crayons mark sterile printer paper.

They swirl like the snow weighing down their coats, traveling in circles around the sun until they are found on a snowy cliff, hidden among layers of the same thing and laying on two sides of the same mountain.
