that mustard colored jacket
by Kirsten Elmer

it's dull like the dirt I drag
my heels through;
it burns like the sun in
my eyes...
it's one of those bloated winter coats that probably hisses against its own fabric;

let's slice through it right down
your back;
let's wait and see if you'll bleed out whatever's inside...
let's climb the tallest building
and see how hard it is to shoot you down;

you know you wore it the night
you left me four voicemails;
the night it was 16 degrees and you hit me twice...
I threw out the gloves that touched my stinging cheek,
but I saw you wear it the next day;

I hope you know you have a target on your back;
I hope they see you when it's that cold
next time...
I hope you know that, because of me, now all you'll ever be, is
that mustard colored jacket.
