To be 19 in Boston

Alex Curran-Cardarelli

Denison University

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.denison.edu/exile

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://digitalcommons.denison.edu/exile/vol62/iss1/32

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the English at Denison Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Exile by an authorized editor of Denison Digital Commons.
To be 19 in Boston
by Alex Curran-Cardarelli

We flashed a smile, our Id, and were given a bottle of Rosé.

We smoked cigarettes under the red table cloth and winked at the boys across the room.

Soon enough, we were swerving down Storrow Drive. The buildings shone with a blinding fluorescence. It was as if each window had stolen a star, and now space was brooding over its loss.

Now, in the Ted Williams tunnel, everything turned a yellow haze.

Before we knew it, we were on the Bunker Hill Bridge, and Allison’s perfect ballet bun was bobbing out the window. She was saying goodbye to her Rosé, teenage dreams and gourmet cheese, onto the magnificently, purple lit bridge.

Too soon, we were on route 1, driving away from the city that stole the stars from the sky.

Finally, we were on a back road; the Rosé stained our memories black like the road before us. Our teenage years left empty, just like our purses, stomachs, and gas tank.