Charm for Walking Alone at Night

Jaley Bruursema

---

In the eddy of my flash-lit breath

I see I've spun an incantation, magic thicker than smoke and steam, magic so thick I split into four slivers of moon at certain intersections of lamplight.

In sections my extra selves surround me, slipping over ground as I march beside the school's lot of empty buses, spooling back inside me, dissipating as I thumb the sky's scaly back, count the Seven Sisters, sisters sharpening seven knives polishing them with opened darkness, pressing blades to milk-white throat of night.
