Chimaera

Maggie Reagan
Denison University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.denison.edu/exile

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://digitalcommons.denison.edu/exile/vol58/iss1/22

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the English at Denison Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Exile by an authorized editor of Denison Digital Commons.
Chimaera
By Maggie Reagan

“As you’re pretty, so be wise; wolves may lurk in every guise.”
-Charles Perrault, Little Red Riding Hood

“Absolutely not,” my sister shakes her head as I step out of the changing room. “Try this one instead, it’ll make your waist look smaller and your boobs look bigger and it’s a much better color for your eyes.” The saleslady, in the corner, blows a lionlike fringe of hair from her face in agreement while I shed, like snakeskin, the old dress.

We were delighted, at first, when we heard about the escaped animals in Muskingum County, hoping to see a pack of wolves at dusk, running west towards Montana and its fierce, far freedom, or the giraffe climbing languidly uphill towards us, the sun setting between her long legs. She did not know to run from men with guns.

In the summer, my hair lightens to the color of the Serengeti cape hare’s fur. My sister has winged her catlike eyes with kohl, and all of us adjusting our clothing, tightening, buttoning, holding in. All of this untaught. All of this less grotesque than a girl’s body on its own.

The young policeman who brought her down had stood face-to-face with a lion as well, the beast trembling beneath the weight of this new, wide world. His hands confidant on the muzzle of the gun, his own hair golden as kings in the light of a fading sun.

Afterwards, he tosses back a pint with his friends at the dive bar around the corner. When a small herd of girls in short skirts walk by, he wolf-whistles and grins. He nods towards a girl who absently tugs at her hemline, looking over her shoulder. To the men he says, Look at that—legs like a fucking gazelle.